The Berkshires--Winter and Summer

(Maplewood Institute Prize Essay)

I LIVE in Florida. I have lived there all my life; so, naturally, I am accustomed to one climate the entire year. I was much interested, therefore, when I was afforded the opportunity of visiting the section of New England called the Berkshires.

Upon my approach to this part of the country, all that I could see around me were mountains of a dark purple hue silhouetted against the red and gold of a setting sun. Slowly waving back and forth in the soft breeze, the leaves of the trees formed lacy shadows on the roads as we drove through the small towns of Lee and Lenox.

A few days after my arrival, my hostess desired me to see the two lakes—Onota and Pontoosuc. As we drove over the different roads around the lakes, we could see swimmers in gaily-colored suits, canoes gliding smoothly across the surface of the water, and men in flat-bottom boats fishing at distant edges of the lakes. On courts all around the lakes people were enjoying golf and tennis.

Driving around a bit after our sightseeing we noticed people on the hillsides and near the trickling streams—a pride of the Berkshires—enjoying picnic suppers in the late afternoon. Before our return home we even saw a party of berry-pickers.

At the close of summer, one morning, I arose very early (for I did not wish to return to Florida admitting that I had not seen a New England sunrise) and I experienced one of the most beautiful of day-breaks. During the night it had rained and as the sun crept over the mountain in early dawn, its rays were absorbed by the trees and flowers. In a very short time all nature was sparkling in this crystalline dew.

This was summer.

As my visit extended through the winter months, I not only witnessed but also took part in the thrilling, healthy winter sports of this section of New England. There was tobogganing at break-neck speed over high hills covered with snow—that magnificent product of the heavens which I was seeing for the first time. And how thrilling was that first skiing expedition with the snow blowing in one's face! What a wonderful sensation! And then there were bob-sledding, skating, ice-fishing, sleigh-riding, and oh! so many other pastimes of health and pleasure in this fascinating country of the Berkshires.

And this was winter.

Naturally coming from a southern climate, I was deeply interested in this season of winter. But the thing that even more deeply interested me was the extreme contrast of the two seasons in the very same part of the country. For contrast there was—everything green in summer, everything white in winter; lightweight clothes in warm weather, heavy wools and furs in cold weather; golfing on a green in summer, tobogganing over a hard crust of snow in winter—everything, everywhere, seemed contrasted in this picturesque spot of nature called the Berkshires.

Class Song(Tune: Smilin' Through)I

'Tis with sadness tonight
 That we all gather here
 With the thought that our pathways must part.
 For three years we've spent here
 With our classmates, so dear
 At old Pittsfield High
 Our Pittsfield High—
 Good-bye.

II

As we travel along
 Down the highway, called life,
 We shall pause now and then to recall
 This great hall of learning,
 With our hearts ever yearning
 For old Pittsfield High
 Our Pittsfield High—
 Good-bye.

III

So farewell to our school
 And farewell to our friends
 To our teachers so faithful and true.
 To the Purple and White
 Our own colors so bright
 To our Pittsfield High
 Dear Pittsfield High
 Good-bye.

Class Prophecy

WE three old maids sat dozing by the radio in a home for the decrepit. The strains of a Beethoven Minuet were sending us into a reverie. Suddenly we realized that the music had stopped and that we were listening to what we thought was a speech, until the voice slowed down a bit to say that this was Gerald Throp announcing. Our ejaculations when we recognized the name of our former classmate were so prolonged that we did not take heed who was being announced. But when the rich, melodious voice reached our ears, we knew it to be none other than that of Walter Bass, Socialist candidate for the Presidency. And, with Frances Manvel as commander-in-chief of the Party he had the right to be confident of success.

The mention of these names turned our conversation toward our former classmates and we spent a delightful evening discussing all we had heard concerning them. First in our train of thoughts came Tony Salvaggio, who promises to make a new man of anyone in thirty days through his patented physical culture program. His guiding light, by the way, is Nora Reddy while his model of manly development is Joseph Frieri.

Milton Shepardson and Merrill Hart have purchased a horse and wagon, and all the mothers buy groceries from them so that their children may see what a horse looks like.

Barbara Leonard, who had always shown a "morbid propensity" toward spinsterhood, is now worthy of the epithet "old maid", and is stubbornly spurning the ardent advances of Ernest DeFazio.

Ada Menin and Blanche Westover are known unofficially as the powers behind the throne of the U. S. Steel Corporation, although Peter Russo is its nominal head.

Monroe Yeats is digging gold in California. Elizabeth Wellman is gold-digging likewise,—in Roy Butterfield's Palais Royale night club. Another of the attractions at his club is an all-star revue which includes Ralph Simmons and Blanche Herman, known as the "Dancing Dervishes".

Remembering the sub-mediocre intelligence of Wallace Jordan, it was no surprise to learn that he is still farming on the little plot of land in his backyard. Too busy with his experiments to bother with anything else, he advertised for a capable housekeeper. Miss Thelma Cuthbertson, still an ardent admirer, volunteered her services and now fills that post.

Three star salesmen of the Fuller Brush Company, Bill Joyce, Don Nealon, and Lewis Wesley, owe their fluency in impressing prospective lady customers to their high school training. Among the ordinarily staid housewives who have not been able to resist their charms, and whose houses, in consequence, are swamped with brushes are: Ella Garrett, Suzanne Wendell, and Agnes Keegan.

Julia Root has at last attained her goal and is now a peaceful resident of Sioux City. She recently bought a Frigidaire because her sorely tried constitution can no longer resist the chill of the last ice-man's hand. (The broken-hearted ice-man, by the way, is "Scrub" Howard). She still maintains she "don't know nuthin'"—Have it your own way, Judy.

Zukerman and Zalutsky are heads of the Z. Z. Butter and Egg Farm, which necessitates their taking frequent trips to the far West. Unscrupulously fond of being heralded in the home-town papers under the heading "Local Boys Make Good", they have employed Irving Wolfe to exaggerate or invent their thrilling experiences. The folks at home became quite alarmed when they read Wolfe's version of their encounter with James Kelly, John Ford, and Joseph Candiliere, three soldiers of fortune seeking transportation and mistaken for desperate bandits by our travelers. Wolfe described them as Hercules, Atlas, and Samson, respectively.

Louis Menin is a prominent member of the Keith-Albee Circuit. He specializes in wise-cracking and repartee. Others in the troupe are: Margaret Stone, Mildred Wetherbee and Virginia Wilkinson as chorus girls. Among the acrobats are Jennie Ranti, Vera Wilker and Ruth Storie.

Phyllis Morrison has these many years devoted her life to the spiritual salvation of heathen Bornese. Those unfortunates who dare to approach her are forced to contribute, for she is still powerful.

Virginia Nash is prospering. The most select hotels in Pittsfield depend upon her to furnish them with frogs' legs from way out there in West Pittsfield.

The all-active Kathleen Cole whom we remember as a noisy and violently temperamental child has joined the ranks of the Communists and has won over all of Abby Lodge to her ideas. Allan Langdon, her accomplice in all school-day uprisings, has now settled down to the comparatively mild task of hunting panthers in Africa.

Gracie Dean and John Byrnes are featured radio performers. Their act reminds us of the Burns and Allen skit, popular when we were seventeen.

Scientists are at a loss to discover the reason for Fred Walter's prolonged state of dormancy. We suspect that it was to get away from the shrewish wife, Janice Rhodes, that he is purposely duplicating the Rip Van Winkle stunt.

William Plouffe has gone in for Indian dancing in a big way and has taken as his squaw, Cornelia Dunham who is now skilled in the art of making cornmeal mush for her Big Chief.

Clarence Hansen, though naturally cold and impassive, has overcome his nature and become the premier lover of the screen. We are reliably informed that it is none other than Eric Melbye who teaches him the subtle art.

Paul Lenny and Bessie Shusterman have combined their talents very profitably, we are told. They have gained a worthwhile reputation as wandering minstrels,—Paul singing and Bessie accompanying him with her violin. Earl Engleman is utilizing his energy picking up the pennies.

Tony Sangiovanni has discovered a new planet which he plans to explore. Martina Klose is going with him in hopes of finding bigger and better men. Bill McEneaney is going along to furnish the heat.

Since Bob Bolza started modelling men's clothing all the ladies have suddenly become interested in inspecting apparel for husbands and brothers who, in most cases, we fear, are non-existent.

Antonio Gallego thought he had perfected an instrument for detecting lies. He was convinced of the failure of his device, however, when he tried it out on George Beach who had been an understudy of Baron Munchausen for years.

Wallace Hunter has become quite expert in caring for young children and has decided to commercialize his talent. He and Mrs. Hunter (née Elinor Brockway) are conducting a kindergarten. James Penoyer, Jr., who bears a striking resemblance to his father, is its cutest member.

Marie Arnold is an unhappy widow, in mourning because her spouse had eaten too many of her "prize" biscuits.

Doris Evzerow has recently been awarded a Carnegie medal for her invention—a minute food capsule guaranteed to be the equivalent of three boxes of cheese tidbits—and really much easier to eat at inconvenient moments.

Marie Carnevale and Gladys Champagne are enriching the yeast companies in an attempt to grow up.

Rhoda Walker is still going strong for nuts. Rhoda is the brains of a Psychopathic Hospital. Edward Harubin, who has gone “nutty” about her, is feigning madness to be a member of the institution.

Marjorie Briggs has at last invented a natural curl. It is rumored that she wormed the secret out of Ruth Prodggers—but she insists she has discovered her own secret experimenting only on Statia Woitkoski, Alice Bondi, Ruth Carpenter and Ida Simon, who are now patiently awaiting the inevitable millionaire who will not be able to resist the beauty of their undulated tresses.

Speaking of tresses, the brilliant hair of Lygia Maddocks has set fire to several hearts. We have received this information from Theobald Tone and Frank Pictrowski who, as dispensers of advice to the lovelorn, have had to prescribe remedies for several victims.

Donne Morrison, debonaire professor of Sanskrit in a well-known college for girls, is willing to pay a colossal sum of money for some preparation that will enable him to hide his maidenly blushes, for Rose Puhalski, Grace Carpenter, Catherine Provost, and Gladys Pritchard are in his class. Ruth Bennett is also in need of some such veil for her modesty.

Among the henpecked husbands are: Robert Finch, Kenneth Gorman, William Newmarker and Kenneth Walsek.

Temporarily incapacitated by the negligent prescriptions of Dr. Marshall Root, who had been treating our heart troubles, we heeded the timely advice of Dr. Rita Levine when she suggested a month's sojourn in pleasant company. Therefore we immediately employed Karl (with a K, please) McEachron as our chauffeur. When we passed through New Ashford on our way south, our driver's eye was attracted by a buxom housewife coming from a cow pasture. She had evidently been milking, for she was carrying a pail and a stool. It was the vivacious Helen King, who had learned the duties of a farmer's wife. Karl's prolonged glances in her direction caused the death of a hen strutting across the road. At this the woman's husband, Francis Eddy (incidentally, the constable) informed us in language so emphatic that it cannot be quoted, that we must reimburse him.

Passing an orchard in West Virginia, we developed a sudden yen for raw apples. We sent the ever-amiable Karl to procure a few. He returned to tell us that the apple pickers, David Cullen and Richard Dalrymple, had gone to ask their mistress' permission. When we saw the mistress approach, we anticipated some of that famous Southern hospitality. Instead, with a cool and haughty manner, she had come to warn us not to leave her lawn cluttered with apple cores. Our mouths fell agape simultaneously, for it was Barbara Moran become a Southern lady!

Robert Hawley, the Kentucky Gentleman, is one of the confirmed bachelors. He lives in the Blue Grass Mountain region quite contentedly with his horse, his dog, a pipe and a book, spending his days in philosophic meditation.

Latest news dispatches from Paris had informed us that the Follies Bergère numbers among its members the flirtatious Leslie Blackett, the sprightly Janet Anderson, and the frivolous Vera Williams in the latest boyish bob, starring Priscilla Wood in the Dance of the Seven Vales.

It is rumored that the two “Romanoffs” who are doing a fine business as gigolos in Paris, are really Victor and Guido D'Angelo. It is also rumored that Frank Condron is wooing the Crown Princess Juliana with some degree of success, having promised the people of Netherlands a duck in every pot if he becomes king.

Levinson has become practically cadaverous looking. His emaciated state is due to the fact that the housewives of Holland insist that he take off his shoes before entering their kitchens. Nathan says he would rather starve than be ordered around by any woman. He is starving!

Julia Lekarczyk has gone to Poland with the intention of proving that Paderevski was born in the United States. On the same ship is Karl Risch, who is going to Germany to find out how to make American Lager Beer and pretzels taste the same as they do in Germany.

Murray Haskins and Joseph Mauro were recently arrested in Constantinople and almost “pilloried, mangled with the shears, whipped at the cart's tail, and flung into a noisome dungeon to die”. All this for neglecting to remove their shoes on the threshold of St. Sophia. Fortunately, through the winning appeals of Celia Dressman and Dorothy Norton, very important members of the Must Have a Camel's household, the two offenders cleared their slate by promising they would leave the country and never again pollute the temple of worship by their presence.

Theda Forti, who calls herself “La Paloma”, is touring the Continent and it is hard to say whether her success is due more to her own talent or to the clever management of Rita Forni and Nellie Billota, booking agents and theatrical managers.

Charles Martin has given up the worldly things of life. He has buried himself in the mysteries of Egyptian hieroglyphics. In the same region is Floyd Hinckley, a fanatic in his efforts to prove that the Sphinx is filled with expression. What the expression is, Floyd has not yet discovered.

Mario Alessio, blatant ambassador to Italy, is dictating to Mussolini. It is due to him that Italy has presented the United States with a complete collection of the works of Michael Angelo and Leonardo Da Vinci. Now he is persuading the Italian government to turn over to the United States her Merchant Marine—all this in grateful recognition of the services of Elihu Klein, M.D., Ph.D., LL.D., in excavating a sliver from the royal hand of the Prince of Piedmont.

Rocca and Rosen have gone into the excavating business, too, so Engle tells us. He was recently convinced of their thoroughness in working when he went to them to have some teeth extracted.

Among the attractions at Barnum and Bailey's Circus is Jennings Braun, who hypnotizes all by the power of his eyes. Introducing him is the garrulous Hubert Dalton in the capacity of Barker.

When we discovered that Louis Genovese was selling patent medicines in the side show, we concluded that he must have thought a quack doctor's business more profitable than that of a professional actor.

Attracting the multitude by compelling appeals to all repentant sinners was the itinerant preacher, the impassioned William Donaldson. Standing on a high platform he was waving his arms in an attempt to be as forceful as Demosthenes. And whom should we see walking down the aisles with heads bowed in abject humiliation but the two kings of sinners, Thomas Humphrey and Fred Hagyard!

The Senior Play in Retrospect

Daphne	Agnes Keegan
Miss Winnacker	Phylliss Morrison
George Howell	William Donaldson
Ned Pembroke	William Plouffe
Nicholas King	Charles Martin
The Sergeant	Nathan Levinson

Mrs. Pembroke	Gladys Pritchard

The house darkens. The footlights burst on brilliantly in a vivid blaze. A hush comes over the audience. A pause—and the curtains sweep majestically apart. The Senior Play has begun:

The stage represents a modern apartment on Riverside Drive. The doorbell is ringing. A butler walks stiffly across the room to answer it. We hardly recognize Francis Eddy in his stage costume. The doorbell answered and a 'phone call attended to, our butler turns his attention to Susie, the maid. Hm, Julia Root does very well as Susie, we conclude. And so the first act progresses. Ah, here is William Donaldson—a perfect lawyer, indeed. Then comes the big moment, the entrance of the villain in the person of Charles Martin. My, what a vocabulary he has! An interpreter would be appreciated.

But we have been so engrossed in watching our friends' entrances that we have neglected the plot. It's something about Mrs. Pembroke's stolen rubies—or is it emeralds?—a packet of love letters, and an exchange of suitcases in a train wreck. These all fit into the story somewhere. King, it seems, has the love letters, and Howell, the jewels, which King has stolen. Howell has stolen the letters for his friend, Ned Pembroke, so that Ned can propose to Daphne, without being embarrassed by a breach of promise suit from a discarded show girl, Vera Vernon. See how simple it is?

The police become embroiled in the affair when Susie comes upon the bandit's revolver and phones them. Enter, therefore, Nathan Levinson, William Joyce, and Wallace Jordan—the officers. Through no lack of effort on the part of Mr. Levinson, be it understood, the investigation is a failure. Mr. King—or Mr. Martin, if you insist—successfully outwits him and the curtain falls.

As the second act opens, (can we believe our eyes?) the officers are puffing with great gusto upon cigars. The climax of the act is the great fainting scene. Mr. and Mrs. Howell are quizzing Ned about the theft of his mother's jewels. Daphne enters, unbeknownst to all, and misconstrues the words. Under the impression that Ned is a thief, Daphne bowls over in a dead faint. She somehow manages to maneuver the feat in such a manner that she lands comfortably in the arms of William Donaldson and Bill Plouffe.

The act ends with the arrival of Vera Vernon, to whom Ned had written the above-mentioned letters and from whom Howell had stolen them. The comedy scenes have been so good that by this time we've lost the thread of the story. Perhaps it's just as well.

We are now in the third act. Vera Vernon (Helen King) causes our two heroes much embarrassment, wife and fiancée both appearing on the scene and demanding explanations of this woman's presence. Auntie, too, is horrified. There ensues an intensely dramatic scene in which Thelma Cuthbertson denounces Mr. Donaldson in a most unlady-like manner.

The main idea in the third act, however, is to get the jewels. Susie comes upon them and secrets them in her stocking. Later she deems them safer down her back, so down they go. The police conduct a search for the jewels, but overlook Susie. King, however, forces Susie to reveal the location of the gems. He is momentarily nonplussed at learning their rather inaccessible hiding place. Then gathering his courage, he bravely retrieves the jewels, whereupon our harrassed heroine cries, "You got hands just like the iceman".

King leads Mrs. Pembroke to believe that he is a detective, gives her the jewels, collects the reward, and departs. Reimbursed by King for giving him her aid, Susie leaves for her beloved home town, Sioux City. And that is that!

The curtain descends. The footlights go out. The house lights up. The Senior Play is over.

But may we stop here? Oh, no, for something has been omitted. Who developed Francis Eddy's English accent? Who gave Julia Root that dumb expression (in the play, of course)? Who made Agnes Keegan's fainting scene so natural? In short, who made the Senior Play? The answer in each case is Miss Kelly. No account of the play would be complete without reference to her thorough coaching. Although I have thus far treated this subject rather lightly, I say with all sincerity that whatever measure of success we attained was due entirely to Miss Kelly's efforts.

We can always think of the play as successful, not only dramatically, but socially and financially as well. Many of the fondest memories of our high school years will center around it.

Class Will

WHE, the Senior A Class of February, 1933, of Pittsfield High School, in the year of economic distress and budgetary adjustments, bounded on the north by St. Luke's Hospital, on the east by a slaughter house, on the west by Crosier's Funeral Parlor, on the south (somewhere) by a beautiful cemetery, being in perfect health and of colossal mentality, do establish, publish, and declare the following as our last will and testament, hereby revoking all wills by us heretofore made.

We do bequeath the following:

To Mr. Geary: a mighty Klaxon of resounding qualities for his Chevy—also, just one more class problem to worry about.

To Miss Kaliher: a jar of Vick's Vaporub and a bottle of Vapex, that she may not suffer from colds as she has previously done.

To Miss Nagle: a Senior "B" Vergil class with the sincere hope and desire that it may be almost on par in co-operation and brainwork as our unique class.

To Mr. Murray: The privilege of writing zeros after the names of Senior "A"s who fail to answer his How's, When's, Where's, Why's.

To Mr. Herberg: the proof that an angle may be bisected, trisected, "quat-tron" sected, "quinque" sected, etc. (May it forever be settled).

To Elihu Klein: $33.00 that he may register his "chariot", including property damage insurance.

To Frances Manvel: an elephant bank, for the class dues of the financially flush Senior "A" class.

To Helen King: a nice, big, luscious chocolate cake consisting of nothing but vanilla frosting.

To "Russ" Howard: a new hat in place of his present dilapidated headpiece.

To Karl McEachron: our hearty hopes and aspirations that he may be Sousa's successor as a band leader.

To Donne Morrison: a blood curdling scare (of some kind) to ascertain whether or not he can lose that rosy "school girl complexion" (that eternal blush).

To Helen Pagery: the baton of Karl McEachron with which she may direct the sonorous P. H. S. Band.

To Harrison Sclater: the art of "chiseling" which some of our members have developed.

To the entire faculty: the right of tenure of office, and last but not least—a weekly salary to provide them with coffee and doughnuts.

Address to the Faculty

Members of the Faculty:

We, of the graduating class, have heard the farewell addresses of several former classes; always, however, with the thought that the sentiments expressed in them were insincere and hypocritical. At that time, our sophomore and junior years, it seemed impossible that anyone could honestly say he regretted parting with his teachers; that seemed to us the most desirable thing in the world.

However, time and reflection have mellowed our attitudes towards you; we realize now that you have been the finest friends we could ever possess. We begin to appreciate only now, the kindness and patience that you lavished upon us. True, we have had our disagreements, but now we know that they were instigated by us, and we marvel at the infinite patience and tolerance you displayed. Fortunately, every one of you is of high enough moral calibre to forget even the severest squabble and to let by-gones be by-gones.

These past three years have been the happiest of our careers, and when we reflect that they were spent in almost constant association with you, we begin to realize to what extent you helped develop our characters. Those years marked the formative period of our lives, and it is largely due to you that we have developed along the right lines. Had we searched the world over, we could not have found a group which could have exerted a better influence upon us than you.

You were more than mere pedagogues and you gave us something besides book-knowledge. Something of your inner selves, your high ideals and lofty thoughts have become part of us. That intangible and indefinable spirit that you radiate has inspired and guided us toward the higher and nobler things of life. Every seed of intellectual and cultural taste that we possess has been inspired by you.

The eve of our graduation is here; soon we shall leave you. It is for this reason that the happiness and elation we feel at having completed one lap in our journey through life is tinged with sadness and regret. You have so endeared yourselves to us that we are loath to say good-bye. It is only now that we realize how much we shall really miss you; and, members of the faculty, we wish to assure you from the depths of our hearts that, though you may forget us, your memory will always linger with us. We shall always think of you as beacons of light, pointing out the right path and leading us towards it.

It is with a deep and sincere feeling of gratitude that the class of February, 1933, says to its faculty, "Thank You".

Walter Bass.

On Composing Poetry

I've scribbled and scratched,
And I've racked my brain,
To compose a poem,
I've tried in vain.
I've mumbled and grumbled,
That's all there is to it.
To compose a poem,
Well, I just can't do it.

Address to Undergraduates

HEAR ye, hear ye,—all who are downhearted, depressed, and despondent—lend me your ears. Mountains crumble, trees are uprooted, the sky has fallen from its spacious home in the heavens. All is chaos and confusion. In a few short days we, the members of this famed old class of February, 1933 will soon leave you. Already the eyes of the faculty are dimmed with tears. Already the lowly sophs are walking tearfully and silent along the corridors. Already weeping juniors, overcome with grief, are forced to leave their beloved classes. It is a sad, sad time of the year for the undergraduates, knowing that they will no longer have the opportunity of gazing upon our intelligent and superior faces.

From time immemorial there has always been something that has been given very freely—advice. Of course, we, who are graduating, realize that you will be only too grateful for our words of wisdom; therefore, we have condescended to pass down to you five commandments. May you heed them wisely.

First: Senior B's, you who are about to enter the threshold of wisdom, do not stain your fair name by speaking to sophomores. Treat them as you would grasshoppers, bugs, and other insects.

Second: Would-be Senior B's, remain aloof and dignified. Remember your predecessors and the high mark you must try to live up to. If you must speak to juniors, see them in private where no one can see you.

Third: Always come prepared with some wise crack in order to get on the good side of the teachers. Caution: Refrain from any while reciting in Mr. Murray's history class.

Fourth: Don't forget your ear muffs if you have classes on the third floor with Mr. Lynch. We realize your heads are made of marble, but unfortunately, your ears are not made of the same material.

Fifth and last: I wish to emphasize two little words of the English language, words that mean so much but take such little effort to do, "carry on". Do not be discouraged by the high ideals set by our class. We have tried to do things just a little better than anyone else. You cannot hope to reach our elevated goal, but you can endeavor to set up one of your own, and when you take our places on this platform a half year hence, you will be able to point with pride at your record and say, "We have carried on; now it is the turn of the next class".

Remember to trust in your teachers implicitly. You will find them helpful, interesting, and willing to co-operate with you in all your tasks. They are human and therefore have weaknesses the same as you and I.

In conclusion, I wish to impress upon you that the real success of Pittsfield High School is in your hands. Undergraduates, may you carry on wisely and skillfully as the class before you has done. You have our best wishes for success and happiness and where there's a will there's a way, so Good Luck!

Floyd Hinckley.

LOGIC

"Arithmetic is a science of truth," said the professor, earnestly. "Figures can't lie. For instance, if one man can build a house in 12 days, 12 men can build it in one."

"Yes," interrupted a quick-brained student. "Then 288 will build it in one hour, 17,280 in one minute and 1,036,800 in one second. And I don't believe they could lay one brick in that time!"

While the professor was still gasping, the smart "ready reckoner" went on:—

"Again, if one ship can cross the Atlantic in six days, six ships can cross it in one day. I don't believe that, either; so where's the truth in arithmetic?"

"Why are you so late?"

"I fell down stairs."

"Well, that shouldn't have taken you long."

Allen: "Do you think you could learn to love me?"

She: "No. I always hated to study hard."

Girl: "Is that English teacher in Room 235 very old?"

Boy: "Must be. He said he gave Shakespeare courses, once."

* * * *

Miss Downey: "You have a lovely color in your cheeks. You must have walked quite a distance to get it."

Senior Girl: "Yes, our neighborhood drug stores don't keep it."

* * * *

Pretty Secretary: "Your little girl wants to kiss you over the phone."

Boss: "Take the message, and I'll get it from you later."

Mr. Lynch: "Just think—man has learned to fly like a bird!"

Wilkinson: "Yes, but he can't sit on a barbed wire fence!"

* * * *

"What have you there?"

"Some insect powder."

"Good heavens! You aren't going to commit suicide?"

G. Perault: "Did you like the gangster?"

H. King: "Oh, he was simply killing."

Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute TROY, NEW YORK

A School of

Engineering and Science

THE Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute was established at Troy, New York, in 1824, and is the oldest school of engineering and science in the United States. Students have come to it from all of the states and territories of the Union and from thirty-nine foreign countries. At the present time, there are more than 1600 students enrolled at the school.

Four year courses leading to degrees are offered in Civil, Mechanical, Electrical, and Chemical Engineering, in Architecture, and in Business Administration, Physics, Chemistry, and Biology. Graduates of the engineering courses are prepared to take up work in any branch of engineering. Graduates of the course in Architecture are prepared to practice their profession in any of its branches. Graduates of the course in Business Administration are prepared for careers in business or for the study of law. Graduates of the courses in Physics and Chemistry are fitted for research and teaching in these fields, as well as for practice in many branches of applied science. The course in Biology prepares for research and teaching, for work in sanitary engineering and public health, and for the study of medicine and dentistry.

Graduates of any of the above courses may continue their work in the Graduate School of the Institute. The Master's Degree is conferred upon the satisfactory completion of one year's work and the Doctor's Degree for three year's work.

The method of instruction is unique and very thorough, and in all departments the laboratory equipment is unusually complete.

An interesting pamphlet entitled "Life at Rensselaer", also catalogue and other illustrated bulletins may be obtained by applying to the Registrar, Room 008, Pittsburgh Building.
